Ways For the Flower Garden

ening troubles in the home garden is not easy for most owners. An all-purpose dust control most of the pests most e time and will take a lot of work out of gardening. A ticide has just been prepar- called, "All Purpose Sprays ducts for the Home Flower ," which lists several sprays might be applied to control pest, rust, mildew, red spider, caterpillars and beetles. roblems are caused by one mbination of these.

Stilbestrol Feeding to Cattle of cattlemen in Appomattox ives reading for some time, about the feeding of stilbes- some of which have been con- . The following is a sum- of test and field experiences about the United States. e of gain and feed efficiency ld be greater with older ani- than with animals about one or less of age. It is more dif- to improve the gaining abili- ty of young animals that are being properly fed, so stilbestrol is less effective with them.

Heavier animals, assuming they are not already fleshy, usually give greater response than light animals.

The rate of gain is usually increased with heifers, but the amount and consistency of gain are greater with steers than with heifers. Preliminary tests show little difference between spayed and open heifers.

Variations in results with the use of stilbestrol may come from variation in amounts of natural estrogens or hormone-like substances in natural feedstuffs.

The greatest response is obtained with high-energy, fattening-type rations. There is a tendency for greater gains on wintering rations, but it is extremely doubtful that this is a good practice.

Both good and not-so-good results have been reported when animals were on pasture. In one test where extremely high winter gains had been made and the cattle were then turned to pasture, those getting stilbestrol did not improve their rate of gain. Other tests show increases.

There seems to be no benefit in feeding stilbestrol a longer time than normal fattening periods. In fact, most results indicate that more benefit is obtained in 50 to 60 days after the animals are on feed than any other time. It is not desirable to remove stilbestrol from the feed during the fattening period.

Stilbestrol apparently has no beneficial effects on digestion, but may cause greater retention of nitrigen. Other factors are perhaps responsible for the increased rate and efficiency of gain.

There seems to be a slight tendency for greater shrink enroute to market with animals fed stilbestrol. However, differences, if any, are small.

Feeding stilbestrol has little effect on carcass quality. If it has any effect, it tends to lower the grade, particularly with younger cattle and those fed stilbestrol over unusually long periods. If the grade is affected, it seems to be because of less marbling and more free fluid in the meat.

High tail heads, weakened loins, increased teat length, and other minor effects have been noted. Under proper feeding conditions, these effects are not significant.

There seem to be no noticeable differences in cooked roasts from animals fed stilbestrol compared with animals that did not receive it; and present means of testing indicate no residue of stilbestrol in the meat.

Results indicate that the only economically desirable place to feed stilbestrol is in the fattening ration of older animals. Animals to be used for breeding should not receive stilbestrol.

Chigger Season

Chiggers can be successfully controlled with insecticides now on the market; although sold under different trade names, be sure the preparation contains either dimethyl phthoiate or benzyl benzoate. These can be applied to the clothing.

Another good idea for the hiker in infested territory is to use dusting sulfur in shoes, pants cuffs and sleeve cuffs.

Yards or picnic areas can be treated with one gallon of toxaphene or chlordane, liquid concentrate, in 50 gallons of water, or with lindane at the rate of two pounds of wettable powder in 50 gallons of water. Under normal conditions, the treatment should be effective from three to six weeks.

Chiggers thrive on wild rodents and can abound in picnic grounds, vacant land,some yards, and bramble areas. Contrary to popular belief, they do not bury themselves in the skin. They stay on the skin surface and you may be able to see them if you have good eyesight.

One way to find out if there are chiggers around is to place a dark-colored paper edgewise on the grass. If chiggers are present they will crawl up the paper and congregate at the top edge. Young chiggers, which are the troublemakers, are straw-colored and can be seen against a dark background.
